

Life's too short to be controlled!

Saturday 23 January 2010

Part I: St. Pancras 14:00

Part II: Piccadilly Circus 16:30

london.noborders.org.uk/lifestooshort

While the migration regime is fortifying itself and setting up rings of defence around European wealth, inner control is tightening to keep public order, at a time where the nation state already seems to be a dead corpse. And with an economy which exploits the most virtual property, the need to control even the remotest parts of people's lives is increasing.

On Saturday 23rd January there will be two demonstrations in London. One will be at St. Pancras, where the UK (e-)border agency put up their controls in the middle of London. The second one will be at Piccadilly Circus where, while commuters, tourists and clubbers stare at the never-ending stream of commercials at ground level, they themselves are under constant observation by security and police in their cosy CCTV headquarters below ground.

So mark the day in your diary!

Protest the outer and internal borders!