

Thousands of migrants are illegalised, locked up and forcibly deported every year for doing what people have done for thousands of years: moving in search of a better life, fleeing wars, persecution, discrimination, abuse and so on. Their lives are made miserable by discriminatory policies devised by unscrupulous decision makers and private companies that make vast profits from their suffering. From immigration prisons, reporting centres, to government and corporate offices, this map is intended to illustrate how the border regime in London and the surrounding areas works.

Border posts

1. Heathrow Airport

The world's busiest airport, where many 'migrant-looking' passengers are routinely singled out and questioned for immigration purposes. Four of the airport's five terminals have a secure cell to hold those detained on arrival or held for further interrogation. There is also a short-term detention facility for those due to be deported called Cayley House. In 2010, the Chief Inspector of Prisons found the behaviour of immigration officers at Heathrow to be "poor", with excessive use of force and a lack of awareness of their responsibilities towards families and children, who continue to be detained frequently in these supposedly short-term holding facilities for lengthy periods.

2. Gatwick Airport

Each of the airport's terminals, North and South, is provided with a so-called short-term holding facility, where migrants are detained on arrival, before being transferred to a detention centre proper, or on their way to be deported. Gatwick also has two detention centres within its grounds, Tinsley and Brook House (see below).

Decision makers

5. Home Office HQ:

2 Marsham Street, SW1P 4DF

The government department that devises and implements, through the UKBA, the discriminatory and repressive immigration policies that make life miserable for so many migrants. Numerous reports have highlighted the poor quality of decisions made by Home Office caseworkers, and whistleblowers have revealed, more than once, a culture of racism and abuse among Home Office employees.

6. Lunar House:

40 Wellesley Road, CR9 2BY
The headquarters of the UK Border Agency (UKBA), the Home Office division responsible for borders, immigration and asylum. Lunar House is the only place in England where people can claim asylum if they are already in the country.

7. Taylor House:

88 Rosebery Avenue, EC1R 4QU
London's main Asylum and Immigration Tribunal (AIT), where asylum and immigration appeals are decided. Although there are some good and fair judges, others are known for unusually high rates of refusals.

Reporting centres

Immigration reporting centres are where asylum seekers and other migrants have to report on a regular basis (daily, weekly or monthly). This involves finger-printing and re-activating their biometric ID cards. There is no reason for this hardship and humiliation other than the authorities' will to keep migrants under control and make life more difficult. Most reporting centres are also provided with secure cells, where those detained while signing on are held for short periods of time before being deported or transferred to an immigration prison in special prison vans. Most are not designed for staying overnight but people have reportedly been held there for long periods subject to harassment and abuse by private security guards. They are also where immigration enforcement teams, or snatch squads who carry out dawn raids on people's homes, are usually based.

Immigration prisons

Officially known as 'immigration removal centres', these are special prisons where thousands of people are incarcerated every year for immigration control purposes – without charge or trial, and with no judicial supervision or time limit. Most of these are asylum seekers, but some are undocumented migrants or foreign nationals who have finished a criminal sentence and are then detained and deported as a secondary punishment. Racist and sexual abuse and physical violence at the hands of immigration officers and private security guards are frequently reported. Eight of the UK's 11 immigration prisons are run by private security companies. It costs between £120 and £130 per day to keep one person in detention.

16. Brook House:

Perimeter Road South, Gatwick airport, RH6 0PQ
Opened in 2009, it holds over 400 male detainees at any one time. Brook House has a particularly notorious reputation for the poor services provided by G4S and the systematic use of solitary confinement, violence and abuse against detainees. In September 2007, No Borders UK organised a protest camp near Gatwick to protest against the building of Brook House.

17. Colnbrook:

A4 Bath Road/Colnbrook by-pass, UB7 0FX
One of two immigration prisons located near Heathrow and the UK's most secure immigration prison. Opened in August 2004, it is run by Serco and has a capacity of 308 for male and female detainees. It also has a short-term holding facility used to hold detainees temporarily before they are deported or moved to a proper immigration prison.

3. Stansted Airport

The airport used for most mass deportation chartered flights over the last few years. A private entrance is used so that normal passengers don't see what happens to deportees.

4. St Pancras station:

Euston Road, N1C 4QP
With a Eurostar terminal, this international train station is a border in the heart of London, where 'migrant-looking' passengers coming from mainland Europe are singled out and questioned. The station has several 'holding rooms' for those detained or held for further interrogation.

8. York House and Gloucester House:

2-4 Dukes Avenue, TW14 0LS
Two Asylum and Immigration Tribunals in West London, with a particularly bad reputation. Asylum seekers and other migrants are finding it increasingly difficult to access adequate legal representation due to cuts to legal aid and the asylum process being speeded up.

9. Angel Square POU:

1 Torrens Street, EC1V 1SX
London's main Presenting Officer's Unit (POU), where the legal representatives of the Home Office in immigration court hearings are based. POUs are the equivalent of the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) in criminal courts.

10. Duncan Lewis:

1 Kingsland High Street, E8 2JS
One of the biggest immigration solicitors firms which has ruined the lives of so many asylum seekers and migrants because of their greed, negligence and poor services, both inside and outside detention. Duncan Lewis also has offices in Harrow (29 Grove Hill Road, HA1 3BN), Shepherd's Bush (54 Goldhawk Road, W12 8HA) and New Cross Gate (182 New Cross Road, SE14 5AA).

11. Becket House:

60-68 St Thomas Street, London Bridge, SE1 3QU

12. Communications House:

210 Old Street, EC1V 9BR

13. Eaton House:

581 Staines Road, Hounslow, TW4 5DL

14. Electric House:

3 Wellesley Road, Croydon, CR0 2AT

15. Overseas Visitors Records Office:

180 Borough High Street, SE1 1LH

A police centre where foreign visitors, including non-European students, have to register on arrival so that the government can keep them under control.

18. Harmondsworth:

A4 Bath Road/Colnbrook by-pass, Heathrow, UB7 0FX

Heathrow's other immigration prison and the largest in the UK, with a capacity of 615 male detainees. Harmondsworth is most famous for the 2004 riot, which was sparked by the death of a detainee and led to its closure. Since then it has witnessed many other 'disturbances' and hunger strikes, as well as protests and blockades outside. It is run by GEO Group Ltd, which took over from Sodexo-owned Kalyx.

19. Tinsley House:

Perimeter Road South, Gatwick airport, RH6 0PQ

Gatwick's other, and older, immigration prison, and the UK's first purpose-built detention centre. It has a capacity of 119 male detainees and 8 families. Despite its location within the grounds of the airport, Tinsley House has seen a number of protests, including one of the first blockades by Stop Deportation in March 2009 to try and stop a charter flight to Iraq. It is also run by G4S.

20. Cedars:

Brighton Road, Pease Pottage, RH11 9AD

Officially known as a 'pre-departure accommodation', this converted school is where families are detained for a few days before their forcible deportation. This latest addition to Britain's detention estate, complete with a security fence and everything, was the government's response to its promise in 2010 to stop the detention of children. It is owned by Arora Hotels and run by G4S, with 'welfare services' provided by Barnardo's, which has effectively served to legitimise the continued detention of children and their families.
